

Emergency information, hand-delivered —New Emergency Notification System contacts residents directly

When an emergency situation confronts you and your family, perhaps one need — excepting immediate safety — is more acute than all others: the need for information.

But tracking down details about approaching severe weather or a nearby man-made disaster may prove tricky when you're moving your family to a safe location. Or when your power is out.

For Henrico residents, the search for emergency information is no longer a search. The county is now placing critical news directly into residents' hands — as long as those hands hold a telephone, cell phone or similar device.

Henrico County has launched an Emergency Notification System (ENS) that sends severe weather alerts and emergency bulletins to residents on their landline telephones, e-mail, cell phones, pagers, Blackberrys and other wireless devices.

The system is designed to enhance the county's ability to rains of the 2003 storm left many residents powerless — and thus unable to receive key information from traditional sources like local media — for several days.

Two-pronged approach

ENS delivers information to residents in two ways: voice and text messages. Participation in the voice service requires no action; all residents and businesses with landline telephones are included. Residents can subscribe to the system's text-message component Think the public library has become a passé institution, with the technological relevance of a video cassette recorder and the drawing power of a made-for-television movie?

Think again. In Henrico, the library is gaining the cutting-edge appeal of the iPhone and generating excitement levels akin to the midnight release of a Harry Potter novel.

Just ask the patrons of the Twin Hickory Area Library, the newest addition to Henrico's check some numbers from the July 8 dedication ceremony for the facility:

- ★ More than 3,000 people attended, despite sweltering summer heat;
- ★ In just three hours, the library's first patrons checked out 3,500 books, DVDs and other items. Some 125 patrons applied for and received library cards.

- ★ Over the course of the library's first week — not counting the dedication ceremony — more than 6,720 people visited, borrowing nearly 22,770 items from its collection and receiving more than 830 new library cards.

Needless to say, the joint was jumping. The sound of all those feet padding through the library's doors was music to the ears of Public Library Director Gerald McKenna.

"This library is situated in the hub of the Twin Hickory community and is easily accessible," McKenna said. "We had wanted to locate it in the heart of the community, and clearly, the new library is addressing that."

The Twin Hickory Area Library replaces the Innsbrook

Branch Library which — due in large part to its presence in the thriving corporate park — had been perceived as a business library primarily serving the business community. That perception shouldn't be a problem for Twin Hickory, which is located in a park, is near a high school and elementary school, and is accessible by foot and bicycle as well as automobile.

"Twin Hickory (library) is positioned in the center of that community," McKenna said. "That's part of its beauty."

Location is just a small part of the beauty of Twin Hickory, a $13.4 million project approved by Henrico voters in the 2000 bond referendum. Designed by Phillips Swager Associates with community input, the two-level building may be mistaken for a ski chalet with its earth and wood tones, stone façade, overhanging roof and banks of windows on three sides of its exterior.

"From whatever angle you view it, this library is distinctive, inviting and attractive," McKenna said. "It is designed to draw people in; it gives you a warm feeling."

Twin Hickory's interior is warm and inviting as well.

Patrons of the Tuckahoe Area Library, which opened in October, may recognize many of the features:

- ★ 40,000 square feet, easily expandable to 60,000 square feet;
- ★ Opening day collection of 110,000 books, periodicals, audio books, DVDs and other items (collection ultimately will reach 120,000 volumes);
- ★ Drive-through book return and pick-up window;
- ★ Public meeting room with multimedia capabilities and 80-person capacity;
- ★ Four group study rooms, a conference room and quiet reading room;
- ★ "Planet Teen" section designed especially for teenagers;
- ★ Children's section with a "living-sea" decorative theme and age-appropriate tables, chairs, desks and other features, as well as a dedicated program room for puppet shows, crafts and story-time activities; and
- ★ Lola's Library Café, with coffee, snacks and more. Twin Hickory also boasts an array of technology:

The library's distinctive design features a stone façade, long banks of windows and prominent roof overhangs. Henrico voters approved funding for the $13.4 million, 40,000-square-foot facility in the 2000 bond referendum.

- ★ 96 public computers, with appropriate levels of screening depending on their location;

- ★ Computer lab/classroom;
- ★ Multi-media capabilities in meeting rooms;
- ★ Wireless access and Henrico Schools iBook access throughout;
- ★ Self-check machines with RFID (radio frequency identification) technology; and
- ★ Color printers and scanners available for public use.

The Twin Hickory Area Library continues to usher in a new era for Henrico libraries, a shift in concept to larger facilities that began with the Tuckahoe opening last year.

"As Henrico grows and becomes more urban, the area library is the perfect way to address the county's changing demographics," McKenna said. "It's a more effective way to confront the challenges posed by Henrico's geography and it's more efficient to operate than the smaller branch libraries."

New area libraries are slated next for Varina and Dumbarton. They were among the library projects Henrico residents voted to fund in the 2005 bond referendum.

The Twin Hickory Area Library is open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., Monday through Thursday, and from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., Friday and Saturday. For more information, call 364-1400 or log on to www.co.henrico.va.us/library.

by logging on to www.henrico-alert.org.

"The voice and text-messaging services are two new tools in Henrico's Emergency Alert System," said Emergency Manager Anna McRay. "They aren't replacing any of the traditional ways our residents receive emergency information — they just give the county additional ways to provide residents emergency notification.”

The voice component uses reverse-911 technology to notify residents of emergency events on their home and work phones. Participation is not voluntary; all numbers in Verizon’s enhanced-911 database are contacted when the voice service is activated, but it is free of charge. (Residents using Voice Over Internet Protocol (VOIP) for phone service should note that they are not automatically enrolled for ENS voice messages, since their numbers are not part of the Verizon enhanced-911 database. Contact your VOIP provider about E-911 services.)

Registration for the text-message component is free. Residents — and anyone else — can sign up their e-mail, cell phones, pagers, Blackberrys and other wireless devices capable of receiving text messages. Subscribers will be charged for messages by their service providers, according to the terms of their individual plans (there is no charge for e-mail messages).

Speed and precision

The text-message system is significantly faster — distributing 36,000 messages in one minute, compared to 46 calls per minute by the voice system — and is used to respond to immediate life-safety issues, such as a tornado or flash-flood warning from the National Weather Service.

The voice system is better suited for incidents affecting a specific geographic area, such as a hazardous-materials spill near a neighborhood.

By integrating the enhanced-911 database with a Geographic Information System (GIS) map of Henrico, the county’s emergency personnel can locate all landline telephones associated with a neighborhood or similar area and target them for voice messages. These “geo-zones” can be drawn precisely and adapted to a specific emergency. In the hazardous-materials spill example, information such as spill size, wind speed and direction, and material type can be used to predict the affected area; landline phones within this area can then be contacted.

The ENS voice service can call a 300-home neighborhood in a little more than six minutes.

Typically, the text-message service will send a brief life-safety message to subscribers’ cell phones and other wireless devices. The message also will direct recipients to a more detailed e-mail message or to local media for additional information. The text service only will be activated for an immediate life-safety matter.

“We encourage subscribers to register as many of their wireless communications devices as possible,” McRay said. “Anyone with an interest in public-safety issues in Henrico is welcome to participate.”

Henrico’s Division of Fire administers ENS, which was implemented by Sigma Communications, LLC. The majority of funding for the $405,321 contract comes from a $300,000 federal Urban Area Security Initiative grant.

Emergency Notification System Q & A

What is (ENS)?

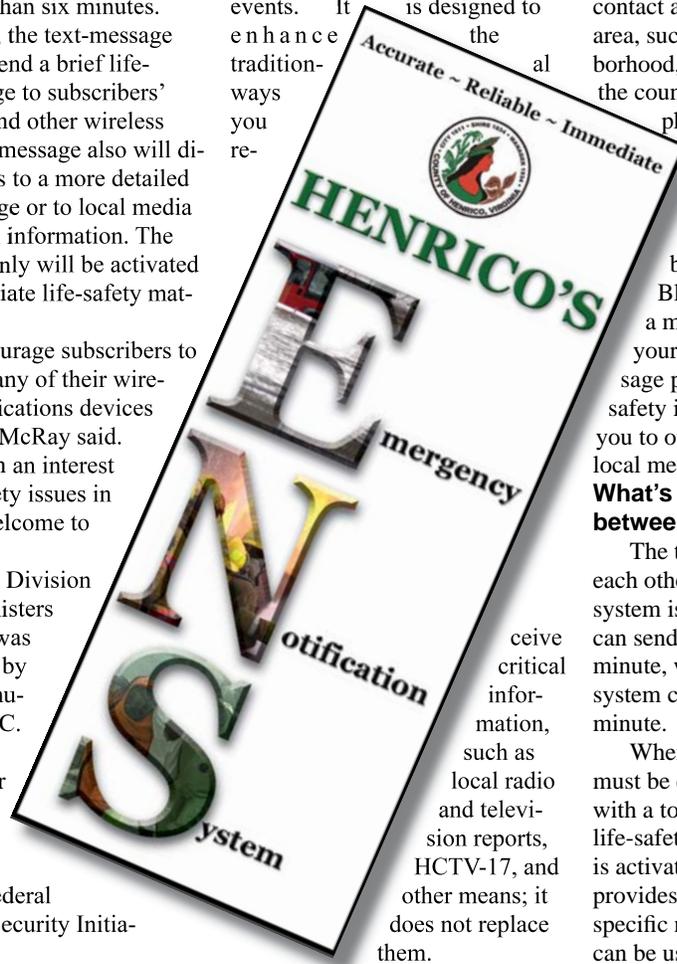

ENS is Henrico County’s newest way to provide emergency information to residents.

It delivers critical bulletins, such as a severe weather alert or a hazardous materials spill, to Henrico residents on their home and business phones, e-mail, cell phones, pagers and other mobile devices.

Does ENS replace other ways I receive emergency information?

No. ENS gives Henrico County an additional tool for contacting residents during both county-wide and localized emergency events. It is designed to enhance the traditional ways you receive critical information, such as local radio and television reports, HCTV-17, and other means; it does not replace them.

When is ENS activated?

Henrico County’s emergency management personnel in the Division of Fire, working with Police and county officials, determine when to activate ENS. For example, a tornado or flash flood warning received from the National Weather Service would activate the system.

How does it work?

ENS has two separate components: a voice-message service and a text-message service.

The voice-message service uses reverse-911 technology to call landline telephones with a recorded message. The voice service can be programmed to contact a specific geographic area, such as a 300-home neighborhood, or it can call all of the county’s 315,000 landline phones.

The text-message service sends a brief bulletin to cell phones, pagers and other mobile devices, such as the Blackberry. It also delivers a more detailed message to your e-mail. The brief message provides immediate life-safety information and directs you to other sources, such as local media, for more details.

What’s the difference between voice and text?

The two services complement each other. The text-message system is significantly faster — it can send 36,000 messages in one minute, while the voice-message system can make 46 calls per minute.

When emergency information must be distributed rapidly, as with a tornado warning or similar life-safety event, the text system is activated. The voice system provides detailed information to specific neighborhoods and also can be used countywide when timeliness is less of a concern.

How can I receive messages from ENS?

If you have a landline telephone at your home or business, you’re already part of the voice-message service. Because it uses reverse-911 technology, the voice service includes every county number in the enhanced-911 database. You don’t have to do

To receive messages from the text-message service, you can register your e-mail, Blackberry, cell phone and other devices at www.henriccoalert.org.

Do I have to live in Henrico County to participate in ENS?

The voice-message system only contacts landline telephone numbers included in the county's enhanced-911 database, so non-residents can not receive these messages.

The text-message system is open to anyone who registers for it, regardless of residency.

Is there a cost?

The voice-message service is free. If you have a landline phone, you are automatically enrolled.

There is no charge to subscribe to the text-message service at www.henriccoalert.org. You may register as many mobile devices as you like for free. However, you may be billed for text messages by your service provider, according to the terms of your service plan.

Do other localities use ENS?

Yes. More than 30 counties and cities in Virginia use the voice and text services.

How can I get more information?

Log on to www.henriccoalert.org or www.co.henrico.va.us or call 501-7183.

Super cans are super easy

Henrico County's five-year transition to automated refuse collection continues in designated areas. Early this year, 6,000 new 95-gallon carts were delivered to customers' homes. In July, an additional 4,000 customers joined the program. The county will continue to shift more refuse customers to automated containers as new trucks are ordered and additional drivers are trained.

The new automated system allows drivers to empty the specially-designed carts or "super cans" into the truck using a mechanical arm controlled from the cab of their vehicle. The addition of county-maintained cans is a more efficient way for Henrico County employees to collect trash and lessens their contact with everyday hazards, creating a safer working environment.

The county's new carts can hold as much as three standard size hand-dumped trash cans.

All trash must now be placed completely inside the cart so that the arm of the vehicle can collect it. The new durable carts can hold the equivalent of three standard-size hand-dumped trash cans; however, residents may order an additional cart from Henrico County for a one-time $65 fee. There is no additional charge to empty the second cart or cost increase for the automated service.

To ensure a speedy pick-up, customers should place carts curbside by 7 a.m. on collection day, with the arrows facing the street and the lid closed. The cart should be within eight feet of the pavement and at least three feet from mailboxes and clear from cars or other obstructions that may block the cart.

If you would like more information about automated trash pick-up in your neighborhood or to request service, please call 501-4275 or log on to the Department of Public Utilities' Web site at www.co.henrico.va.us/utility/solidwaste. Guidelines and a service application are available online, as well as the implementation schedule as it becomes available.

Innovating local government —Henrico programs saluted by national organization

Government is not a static operation in Henrico. County officials and personnel in a variety of agencies constantly seek better ways to serve residents and make local government more effective and responsive.

Each year, new programs — such as a healthy breakfast initiative for elementary students and emergency planning to aid the county's special-needs facilities and population — are recognized for their innovation. The past year has been no different.

Henrico has received 15 Achievement awards from the National Association of Counties (NACo), honoring groundbreaking programs implemented by the county last year. The awards were presented at the 2007 NACo annual conference, held last month in the Metro Richmond Region.

The NACo Achievement Award Program recognizes innovative county government programs annually in a broad range of service areas, including education, administration, parks and recreation, health and human services. The award program began in 1970 as part of a nationwide campaign to modernize county government and improve its level of service; some 97 counties from 27 states participated this year.

"Henrico County is continuously searching for good ideas and creative new ways to serve our residents," said County Manager Virgil R. Hazelett, P.E. "Developing cutting-edge programs is an essential part of our mission to provide the best service possible for our residents."

NACo honored Henrico programs developed and implemented in 2006 by nine county agencies. The awards continue the county's tradition of providing cutting-edge programs to residents. Henrico programs have received 90 NACo Achievement awards since 2000 and 345 over the last 20 years. Programs receiving awards were:

- ◆ "Breakfast-To-Go," Schools; provides a nutritious boxed breakfast for elementary and middle school students as they enter the building, ensuring that they receive a healthy

- ◆ breakfast that can be eaten in the cafeteria or classroom;
- ◆ "Community-Based Fast Track GED Partnerships," Schools; helps targeted adults pursue a GED by joining with partner organizations to offer an eight-week instruction program at easy-access community sites;

Henrico welcomes NACo officials

Henrico County and other area localities joined forces to host the National Association of Counties (NACo) 72nd Annual Conference and Exposition in July. More than 3,000 county officials from across the country came to Henrico and the metropolitan region to discuss NACo policy on a variety of issues, including public safety, health care, economic development and the environment. Here, Henrico supervisors Patricia S. O’Bannon, second from left, and David A. Kaechele, far right, welcome incoming NACo president Eric Coleman of Oakland County, Mich., far left, and immediate past president Colleen Landkamer of Blue Earth County, Minn.

County partners dig deep

Members of the Board of Supervisors recently welcomed a delegation of officials from Saarpfalz-kreis, Henrico’s sister county in Germany, for several days of discussions and exchanges of ideas on local government and other topics. The two groups also took up golden shovels to break ground and plant a “partnership tree,” commemorating the 10th anniversary of the counties’ participation in the sister-county program and the growth of their trans-Atlantic friendship. A partnership tree also was planted in Saarpfalz-kreis, where a Henrico delegation had traveled to help mark the anniversary. Here, the groups pause before planting a linden tree on the lawn of The Cultural Arts Center at Glen Allen.
